

How to throw a great party.

So you want to throw a party, an event, a soiree, if you will? That's great! You've made the decision, believe it or not, that's the hardest step. After all, let's think about it for a minute or an hour as you discuss this with your spouse or significant other and try to get on the same page. The only thing that makes that decision easier is if it is a surprise party in which case they really don't have any say! Now then, making the decisions. What kind of event are you planning, who will be invited, again, I think it's fair to say that there are always these types of situational moments to really consider. Your spouse says "Hey let's invite "Ken" (the names are purely fictional or have been changed to protect the innocent, me). "He's so much fun" You think "Oh great, sure, Ken, can't wait to see him again" Last time we invited him over he tried knee boarding in the pool. Oh sure it was funny, the problem was there was no pool. And... Sue and Jim did not find him amusing what so ever when he tried to dry off with her skirt. So, that said it is safe to assume that when planning an event, all things must be considered, the day, the theme, if there is one, children or no children which brings us to night or day, and the single most important part of any great party is the FOOD. Yes, the food, fill a room or two with happy people raving about the food and you've got yourself one successful event. So I say, take that particular edge off your plate and hand it over to some of the best caterers in this town. Let me first say that I do not mean by any means to take away from the restaurants themselves whom many offer catering food to go that is also wonderful. But the catering companies that can provide you with their FULL service in your home are who we are giving a little love to today. I have had the pleasure of seeing these people in action and it is truly a talent. For gods sake sometimes it's difficult just to get the timing right for dinner for 4 let alone 25, 60 or 300. When you trust your event to the professionals you,
